HISTORICAL SIGNS

Back in 1979 a British journalist from the Guinness Book of World Records was on assignment to interview what was reported to be the world's oldest living man. His name was Shigechiyo Izumi and he lived on Tokonoshima, an island that belongs to the Southern Island of Japan. At the time of the interview Izumi was 115 years old; the journalist was astounded at the remarkable good health Izumi enjoyed, and he learned that Izumi had worked until he was 105.

After further investigation the journalist found that all of the inhabitants of the island enjoyed the same good health and longevity. After returning from the island and sharing his finding with those in the medical field, a team of researchers set out to try and determine what was keeping these people in such incredible health.

CONSIDERATIONS

What was the common denominator in all they discovered?? Their discovery was nothing short of phenomenal; the researchers found that the Island was composed of Sango coral. After testing the water the Islanders drank they found it to be completely different from any other water in the world. What made the water unique was the high alkaline level of the water. When it rains on the island the water sifts through the coral picking up minerals and other elements. Testing of the pH level determined it to be around 8.0 to 8.5. The alkaline level is important because research has already proven that disease cannot survive in an alkaline state and yet they thrive in an acidic environment. If the common denominator for the Islanders was they all drank the water, the link was really simple; drinking water with high pH factor, combined with minerals and other elements, provided their bodies with the natural ability to fight all disease.

The puzzle was now complete; the islanders were free of diseases and lived longer because their bodies were always at an optimum alkaline level due to the coral calcium that was naturally added to their water.

Considering the human body consist of 70% water and the blood 90% it is easy to understand the significant impact coral calcium can have on everyone who used it. It is a fact most people are acidic due to the foods we eat and the liquid we drink. It is also a fact that man has polluted Mother Earth to such a degree that we will never have clean water to drink or fresh air to breathe. Each day we consume chlorine, oils, sediments, etc. etc. just to get a glass of tap water; we are simply trading one vice for another.

The human body cannot survive without water, and yet the water we drink is slowly poisoning our systems.

Bottled water, filtered water and even reverse osmosis water, when consumed is acidic; in other words we normally drink virtually "dead" water. The water on earth will never get any better and we must have water to survive. This is the main reason that makes coral calcium an important player when we talk of good health and longer life. To be clear and fully honest and correct is imperative to say that coral calcium does not cure disease; it simply keeps the pH level of our body fluids in sync so the body fights disease naturally, like it was meant to. Tiny marine animals called polyps are responsible for the formation of magnificent coral reefs found in tropical waters throughout the world. Through a process of ingesting and depositing minerals found in sea water, these remarkable creatures establish coral structures in a variety of shapes and sizes. Over time, parts of the coral reefs are worn down turning the ocean floor into a layer of coral sand.

This coral sand is rich in organic materials and can be harvested without any damage to the environment.

It has been proven that deficiencies of minerals in the body, specifically calcium and magnesium, have been linked to a variety of health disorders including Cancer, Osteoporosis, Nerve and Muscle Damage, Loss of Memory, Cardiac Irregularities, Mental Confusion, even Convulsions and Comas. Coral Calcium works well even for Hiatus Hernia, Rheumatoid arthritis, gastroenteritis, cataracts, ulcerative colitis, Hiperacidity and Indigestion.

Studies have shown proper calcium intake to be a factor in lowering blood pressure and helping to prevent hypertension. Magnesium is a vital factor for the absorption and retention of calcium. In addition, research has demonstrated that magnesium deficiencies may be directly related to severe coronary heart disease and stroke. Studies have shown the average person's diet is deficient in both of these minerals.

The organic mineral composition found in coral sand provides a highly efficient and natural source for calcium, magnesium and every other mineral found in the human body! Coral minerals are readily absorbed into the body. Within minutes of entering the stomach, the coral minerals are converted into an ionic form which is easily assimilated by the body. To further enhance the absorption, vitamin D-3 has been added.

Elevating the pH level in the body is thought to be an essential factor in maintaining overall good health. Inadequate mineral intake may contribute to acidic conditions in the body providing a growth basis for diseases in the body. CorCal offers a safe, non-toxic means of ensuring proper pH levels helping to promote more alkaline conditions in the body.
